Supplemental Figure 1. A map of the study area showing the tessellation. A tessellation was created to allow the determination of correlations between the means of variables of Leishmania infection in dogs versus humans in each tile. Tiles were drawn to contain clusters of household cases; at least five studied clusters were included in each tile. Dark lines outline the borders of tiles in the tessellation. Red dots signify the households studied.